Typhoid fever is called a preventable disease, and yet it is not prevented, and why? It is not the fault of the physicians, nor of the sanitary officers, or authorities, unless it be from the lack of proper ordinances. The fault lies with the public. Just so long as people are careless about boiling their drinking water; just so long as the solied garments and bedding of a fever-stricken person are carelessly handled or permitted to lie around the house until "wash day," disseminating the germs broadcast, just so long will we have the disease in our city and elsewhere. I said above that typhoid fever is a water or milk borne disease. Let me briefly but plainly explain the process by which this dread disease is produced and carried from one locality to another:

AUSTIN EALE—A fine six-room house, with be marked with bloodshed.

President Diaz last week summoned t perfenced here for years, it is of paramount importance that the public should be informed of one of the most fruitful sources of contagion and methods of carrying the disease from one house to another, and from one location to another. That source and method of transmission is the common house fly—Musca domestica.

It is now an established scientific fact which the public is slowly but surely beginning to recognize, that yellow fever is carried by the mosquito. Stegomyia fasciata, and that in the absence of that mosquito there is no yellow fever. That contact with a patient or the clothing of a patient afflicted with that disease is without danger.

It is now an established scientific fact which the public is so situated that the surface drainage from the barn and other outbuildings finds its way into the well or spring. The private vault is full to overflowing. A heavy rainfall washes this corruption into the water supply and the water is polluted. The farmer or some of the farm hands come up from the harvest field hot and thirsty, and go to the spring or well and drink liberal draughts of the contaminated, but cool and clear water. You could not convince that man that that water was anything but pure.

that man that that water was anything but pure.

A few weeks go by and typhoid fever develops, either in the family of the farmer or some of his men. No precautions are taken to shield the patient from files, and the dejecta from the sick room are thrown upon the manure pile or "off there behind the sumach bushes." Another rainfall ensues, and this excreta is carried by small rivulets down through the fields to the little run which meanders on its laughing way to the Potomac, carrying with it the germs of typhoid to the citizens of Washington, while the flies carry the disease to the neighbors.

Contaminated Milk.

Or it may be that the farmer keeps a few cows, and every day he sends to the railroad station a few cans of milk. This milk very often is strained and prepared for shipping in the kitchen or outhouse where the soiled clothing has been carelessly thrown awaiting a convenient opportunity for washing. When the milk cans come back they are rinsed out with the contaminated water and usually a small quantity of it remains in the can, and the milk is thus poisoned by the germ. This, briefly, is Anthrax Bacillus.

It has also been established beyond question that malarial fever is caused and transmitted by the mosquito Anophele, and that in the absence of that mosquito there is no malaria. The old theory that malaria was caused by missm, night air, etc., is exploded.

It has also been established by actual selentific proof that typhoid fever and other germ diseases are carried and dissemilated by the common house fly. It has not, as in the case of the mosquito, been shown or claimed as yet, that the typhoid fever is caused by the bite of the fly, although the typhoid fever germ, bacillus typhosus, has actually been found in the stomach and intestines and excreta of the fly, and the hope of the parents, comes in and the stomach and intestines and excreta of the fly, and we are shocked to hear that Willie and the stomach and intestines and excreta of the fly, and the stomach and intestines and excreta of the fly, and the stomach and intestines and excreta of the fly, and the flow of the fly may cause the disease. But it is quite possible that a bite from an infected fly may cause the disease. But it is quite possible that a bite from an or dejecta of a patient to the food of the reach proven that the germs of typhoid are carried by the fly, mechanically, upon the feet and whigs from the sick room or dejecta of a patient to the food of the exception of the fly and satisfactorily proven that the germs of typhoid are carried by the fly, mechanically, upon the feet and whigs from the sick room more dejecta of a patient to the food of the sease. Wherever there is a possibility of contact between the house fly, the dejecta of a patient to the food of the carried by the fly mechanically, upon the feet and whigs from the sick room more dejecta of a patient to the food of the carried by the fly mechanically, upon the feet and whigs from the sick room more dejecta of a patient to the food of the carried by the fly mechanically, upon the feet and whigs from the sick room more dejecta of a patient to the food of the repeated. This is no fancy sketch. Every word ef a fever patient, and the food supply the conditions are favorable for the dissemination of the disease. These conditions exist all over this city. Certainly, if the germ theory is correct, and typhoid fever is caused by the injection into the human system of the bacillus through the medium of food and drink, then it does not need a very scientific or astute mind to reason that a fly wading through the bacillus-laden dejecta of a typhoid patient one minute, and dropping into a pitcher of milk the bacillus to the milk.

This is no fancy sketch. Every word I have written has been demonstrated by experiment, research, and observation to be true.

The report of the array commission which investigated the cause of typhoid which threw such a pall over the country during the Spanish war clearly showed that the fly was the chief cause of that awful epidemic. "Only a fly speck." but it may carry disease and suffering, death and bereavement into many a happy home, for the bacillus to the milk.

When We Say $1.66 a Month

WE MEAN IT. Other companies will tell you this is mpossible; that their rates are about impossible; that their rates are about as low an ours; that we would confront you with extras by way of commissions; that you would not receive the full amount; that no company could possibly exist on such low rates. Don't be deceived. Let us convince you by facts and figures. Think of it, less than 3 cents on the dollar interest.
